This document is designed to help you begin the process of articulating exactly what it is you want. We look forward to being a part of this season in your life.

The Process

The process of creating a custom piece begins with a discovery conversation about what it is you desire. Once we have a sufficient idea of what you want, we produce and present a design. Then, after we discuss this design with you to ensure its perfection, we begin the fabrication process.

Diamond

The diamond, more than any other gemstone, has been the traditional symbol of love. A quality diamond is rare, durable and most importantly, beautiful. Slight variations in a diamond's color, clarity and cut can have a considerable effect on its value and selecting a diamond can be a daunting task. However, we have outlined the most important elements here to help you consider what diamond is right for you. When beginning the selection process, consider the 4C's as defined by the Gemological Institute of America.

CUT

When considering a diamond's cut both shape as well as cut quality are important. Below are several common cuts.

COLOR

Although most diamonds appear to be colorless, the overwhelming majority of diamonds have a slight tinge of color. The color grade of a diamond refers to the amount by which it deviates from pure white (truly colorless).

CLARITY

The clarity grade refers to the degree by which a diamond is free from internal and external blemishes or inclusions. (Stones illustrated as seen under 10x magnification.)

CARAT

As with all precious gems, the weight of a diamond is measured in carats. Small fluctuations in carat weight may dramatically affect the diamond's value. The most common carat weight is approximately 1 carat.
